Hello Friend,

What a blessing the snow and rain were earlier this week. Nearly four months of no precipitation makes us all appreciate it that much more when it arrives. The cracked rain gauge at the Prescott Creeks office registered .67" which matches neighboring rain gauges reporting to Weather Underground.

It's been one month since the Prescott Creeks office caught fire and we are getting back on our feet. A Fire Recovery Needs List is available on the Prescott Creeks website that provides insights into all the material items needed to re-establish an office from which to advance the Prescott Creeks mission. In kind donations are being accepted. As we wait to hear what the owner's plans are for rebuilding, we've moved off the GMC tailgate and are operating out of another cabin just across the parking lot from our previous location. Ideally we'd like to stay next to the Watson Woods Riparian Preserve if at all possible. We will keep you posted on www.PrescottCreeks.org, Facebook and Twitter as details are available.

While not pretty to look at, wine maker Eric Glomski of Page Springs Cellars declared this wine more than fit to drink. Look for it at the upcoming Prescott Creeks Fire Recovery Event (to be scheduled).

This month we'd like to give a shout out to two fantastic tech firms and their staff for helping Prescott Creeks recover from our office fire in December. The Prescott Creeks file period revealed an unexpected phenomenon in Prescott's creeks. As November and December continued to bring persistent sun and blue skies, Prescott Creeks started receiving calls and emails asking why water had begun appearing in the creeks. It turns out that many of the riparian trees and shrubs are capable of tapping into shallow groundwater. When they become dormant for winter, they release their draw on the water table and groundwater rises. Where the water table is already high, such as in Watson Woods Riparian Preserve, some of this groundwater seeps out into low-lying areas.

The impact on groundwater levels by plant dormancy occurs every year. Normally, the Southwest receives rain through the fall and winter, which can increase streamflow and mask the change in surface water levels due to the rising water table.

For a more thorough explanation of this phenomenon, see the full article on our website.

Thank You

Prescott Creeks would like to extend a sincere THANK YOU to all who responded to our end of the year fundraising campaign. Significant community support protects and restores beleaguered local riparian systems and improves water quality. It also extends grant funds for on-the-ground projects - like an upcoming revegetation project to occur in Watson Woods Riparian Preserve. We could use your help planting cottonwoods and willows! Ken Colburn and Nick VanCampen kept us abreast of the process that led to successful recovery of all our electronic data. Locally, John Staltari of HighGround IT worked with Prescott Creeks to recover data from our backup drives and to configure new systems, to keep the work of Prescott Creeks moving forward. Once Data Doctors recovered our server files, John got us up and running in no time with new equipment.

Hello Friend,

Winter this year seems to be elusive at best. Nighttime lows remind us of the calendar date, but short sleeves and no coat during the day are a mixed blessing for us here in Prescott, Arizona. More striking than the temperature is the lack of precipitation. No flow in many of our local creeks has them looking like nothing more than ditches. Nonetheless, it is that time of year when good stuff begins to happen in the watershed whether there is surface water or not. Shrub willow buds are bursting and migrant birds are returning and beginning nesting. Much of it is occurring a bit earlier than most years and a February storm, like this one forecast for this weekend, would be nice to add some moisture to the mix. We'll watch and wait with everyone else.

Hello Friend,

Granite Creek Cleanup is two weeks away! Sticking with tradition, Prescott Creeks is hosting the Granite Creek Cleanup on Saturday, April 21st, from 9 AM - Noon. Annually since the 1980s, Prescott community members gather at Granite Creek Park, combining their effort to remove trash from our creeks. Eleven years of Prescott Creeks leadership for this event have resulted in 46 tons of trash being removed by over 5000 volunteers. Good job!

Please join us at the Cleanup this year. If you know you are coming, please pre-register at www.PrescottCreeks.org/Cleanup. Registering in advance allows you to select your desired location and tasks, and it helps us plan a successful day out for everyone. When you submit the pre-registration form, you should receive a confirmation email. If you registered online and did not receive a confirmation email, please contact us by emailing Cleanup@PrescottCreeks.org. Note the Cleanup activities at Watson Woods Riparian Preserve this year. Targeted trash collection and trail work have been added as important stewardship opportunities.

We'd like to welcome our new and returning sponsors for the 2018 Cleanup. Please take every

During this past winter, Prescott Creeks took the opportunity provided by the dormancy of Cottonwood trees and Willow shrubs to harvest pole cuttings for revegetation in the Preserve. Cottonwoods and Willows are members of the Willow Family, (Salicaceae) of which all members have an amazing ability to reproduce asexually. In the wild they grow along waterways, where are subjected to periodic floods. The force of flooding can break off branches, which can get washed downstream and buried in the sand. With continued access to water, these branches will sprout roots and grow into full-size trees and shrubs. We humans can take advantage of this natural ability to clone Willow Family plants with relatively little effort and no high-tech equipment. All that is needed to clone Cottonwoods and Willows are cuttings of healthy branches, which can be soaked in the creek and then planted. From late December to early February, Prescott Creeks harvested over 500 cuttings. This could not have been achieved without the many hours of assistance provided by Yavapai County Adult Probation Restitution Work Crews and several community volunteers. In late March, every single one of these pole cuttings was planted.

Cottonwoods and Willows are known as phreatophytes, which means they must be planted deep enough that they are in contact with groundwater. As it turns out, Prescott Creeks has several groundwater monitoring wells within Watson Woods that told us we needed to go at least 9 feet deep to hit water. Achieving this depth required the use of a backhoe and an experienced operator to dig deep pits without causing unnecessary disturbance. Sincere thanks go to Mike Young and Bill Sullivan from Fann Environmental, and to our outstanding volunteers Dave Frechette, Jim Gomon, and Richard Balland for helping us plant this riparian vegetation. Planting pits ranged in depth from 6 feet deep in low-lying areas to over 12 feet deep at the higher elevation locations.

www.PrescottCreeks.org

Hello Friend,

This first week of May it feels as if we're saying goodbye to winter and hello to Spring. Look around and you'll find many plants in bloom - like the native chokecherry pictured below. And the birds are going about their nest-building business for the year. Just yesterday I spent time observing an American Robin working on a nest near downtown in an alley that follows a highly urbanized unnamed wash. The change of seasons is always sure to impress in at least subtle ways if one takes the time to patiently observe it.

The spring storm earlier this week broke our dry streak ever so slightly. Rain gauge readings from around the area have been reported anywhere from .25" to .50" for the event. While this was a welcome and needed respite, conditions are still extremely dry in Central Arizona and beyond. In fact it is so dry that local officials advanced fire restrictions enacted only two weeks ago from Stage 1 to Stage 2 effective today, May 4th. More information about what this means and how to stay safe can be found on the Prescott Creeks website. This is particularly important in places like Watson Woods Riparian Preserve where several wildfires have occurred-most notably the 1997 Watson Woods Fire.

Hello Friend,

Welcome to June. It is undeniable: 2018 has been dry and warm! Fire season started early. Fire restrictions were first imposed mid-April, and vast swaths of public land were closed in May to reduce the risk of human-caused wildfire. According to the National Phenology Network, spring came early in much of Arizona, though there was limited green-up in cool-season grasses and wildflowers throughout central Arizona. We've seen the effects of this lack of precipitation in Watson Woods Riparian Preserve and upstream throughout the Granite Creek Watershed.

Normally green and wet cattails looking crispy in Granite Creek.

While it's hard to complain about the persistence of sunny days, our landscapes are parched and the drought effects everything that lives off the land. From the monitoring efforts of an amazing group of volunteers, American Kestrels have served Prescott Creeks as an indicator of the stress imposed on local wildlife. From volunteer observations, we know that there are two or three pairs of kestrels living in the Preserve, but eggs have not been laid in any of the three nest boxes in the Preserve. Last year around this time, there were fifteen eggs total in these boxes. Dave Frechette, the Prescott Audubon Society volunteer spearheading this project, has suggested that this may be due to the sparse population of grasshoppers, a critical food source for our little falcons. From what we have seen, it seems likely that the birds are aware they do not have the resources to raise young in these conditions and may even be challenged to find enough food for themselves.

Prescott Creeks and local birders have also been seeing Common Black Hawks, which have nested in Watson Woods Preserve for the past several years. However, like the kestrels, we have not yet seen any nesting activity. Black hawks are an obligate riparian species, requiring mature gallery forests to nest and sourcing much of their prey from streams. Granite Creek dried earlier than normal, and it is likely that the black hawks are having trouble finding sufficient food to risk trying to rear young. The adult birds' diligence will help keep them alive until monsoons, when well-earned rains will bring new growth and a fresh supply of food. If they make it that far, they will have another chance at raising a clutch of chicks next year.

Hello Friend,

It is July 6th and it is finally raining. That wet smell is wonderful and the breeze is providing respite from the 100 degree Fahrenheit temperatures we saw in Prescott today. Our fingers are crossed that the summer monsoon, should it build and provide substantial moisture, will benefit the belabored cottonwoods which are dropping their leaves as if it were fall. Grab your umbrella - or not - and go play in the rain.

It is with sadness that we announce today, July 6th, 2018, as the last day for our Conservation Projects Manager, Oren Thomas. He's been a tremendous asset to Prescott Creeks for over a year now and his enthusiasm, expertise, and industriousness will be sorely missed. Oren is leaving fill the new Stormwater Specialist position with the City of Prescott. His role with the City will focus on reduction of pollution inputs to local creeks, and will assist the City with compliance with their stormwater permits. "In this role my work will continue to be in line with the mission of Prescott Creeks," Oren said. "I look forward to partnering with Prescott Creeks on projects in the future." We'll also look forward to seeing Oren out along the creeks.

Prescott Creekside E-News

August 2018

www.PrescottCreeks.org

Hello Friend,

After a prolonged period of nearly no precipitation, July brought the summer monsoons that we've come to expect. Coming out of the driest winter and spring on record, the monsoon has been blessing. Both rainfall and streamflow varied during the month of July with no flows at the beginning of the month and a high flow of almost 2,700 cubic feet per second measured at the USGS gauge at the Yavape Connector. That's enough flow to get out of the banks of Granite Creek in Watson Woods Riparian Preserve. Cottonwoods and willows along with wildlife of all types and sizes are taking advantage of this moisture and it's great to see!

Preserve Entrance at the Peavine Trail

Sometimes the summer monsoon comes so fast and with so much volume that it can cause trouble. That is exactly what happened on Wednesday, July 18th at about 3pm when the Sundog Waste Water Treatment Plant recorded 3.1 inches of rain in about an hour and a half. The drainage that Prescott Lakes Parkway traverses to the east of the Preserve sent an unprecedented amount of water downstream. Unofficially classified as a 200-year event, stormwater infrastructure adjacent to the Preserve and Peavine Trail was inundated and ultimately failed. A bridge on the old railway was washed out and the railbed was eroded away until it was the same level as the floodplain floor in the Preserve.

Welcome Denise Incao

Please help us welcome Denise Incao to the Prescott Creeks Board of Directors. Denise is an accomplished artist and educator who has worked with Prescott Creeks at Watson Woods Riparian Preserve. Through her affiliations with both Prescott and Yavapai Colleges, Denise pioneered curriculum development for an Art in Nature workshop series that helps participants learn about the natural resources the Preserve seeks to protect.

Businesses Supporter Spotlight

Prescott Creeks and the City are coordinating on best strategies to restore the area. Top priorities for the City are reopening the Peavine Trail (a temporary bypass is open) and corrective measures for the stormwater detention basin. Detailed consideration is being given to restoration of wetlands in the Preserve that were filled in with sediment from the trail erosion.

Granite Creek Downtown

Creation of a trail along Granite Creek was the project around which Prescott Creeks Preservation Association formed 28 years ago. Locals now know the trail as part of the Prescott Greenways Trail System. It's 2.5 miles encompass reaches of Granite and Miller Creeks. The trail has been upgraded from an originally simple footpath to a multi-use trail for recreation and transportation.

A recent Daily Courier article about the trail began with the words "foreboding, seedy, inhospitable." Like many community assets, this creek trail has seen ups and downs with available funding for promotion, expansion, and maintenance. The article goes on to state that a new effort is under way to change those negative perceptions. While the City of Prescott is at the helm, businesses along the creek, private citizens, and several not-for-profit organizations - including Prescott Creeks - are all collaborating to "revitalize" the corridor. We'll keep you posted as the project takes more shape.

The Elwha Undammed: What's a River For?

The Elwha River in Port Angeles, Washington is the stage for the largest dam removal in American history. A century ago, a businessman dammed the waters of the Klallam people where 100-pound salmon cast their shadows. Behind the dynamite and bulldozers that erased Thomas Aldwell's dream is a saga of competing ideas about the purpose and meaning of a river.
